PROGRAMME DRAFT

EFA23

19.08.2023 TO 02.09.2023

Status: 16 August 2023

For the whole EFA23 programme please visit: www.alpbach.org
Six finalists from different scientific disciplines will present their high-level research work on the topic of energy. With various research questions ranging from the topics of energy transition to security of supply, the finalists were selected from a total of 35 submissions. The overall winners will be awarded by the jury from the Euregio universities at the Tyrol Day.

During the Euregio Days, entrepreneurs, inventors and researchers from the Euregio region Tyrol-South/ Tyrol-Trentino, will present their innovative products, processes and services concerning the field of energy. The best projects are selected by a top-level jury led by Josef Margreiter and will be awarded at the Tyrol Day which follows Sunday, 20 August.

Join the European Forum Alpbach 2023 kick-off for scholarship holders and participants of the ALPBACH SEMINARS! Meet your group, see an art performance and inform yourself about everything you need to know to successfully navigate through the days ahead.

Tyrol Day 2023: Euregio Summit on Energy Transition and Security of Supply

Crisis as an opportunity for the energy transition: Rising energy prices and the disastrous dependence on Russian gas made us aware of our vulnerability in the energy sector as a result of the war in Ukraine. What potentials does the Euroregion Tyrol/South Tyrol/Trentino have in the field of renewable energies? How does climate change influence the energy transition? How can cross-border security of supply be improved? The Tyrol Day 2023 provides answers!

Entrepreneuring the Sustainable Future

Join us for five days of exploring how entrepreneurial spirit can contribute to tackling grand challenges of climate change. Through an immersive learning experience, participants will gain a deep understanding of how innovative business models can generate societal and environmental benefits and simultaneously be economically self-sustaining. As the seminar relies on collaboration, it will benefit from participants from a wide variety of disciplines and experiences coming together. Participants will identify problems, design solutions and develop them into entrepreneurial opportunities to shape a better tomorrow.

The Many-Faceted Dimension of Energy Transitions

The transformation of energy systems towards climate-compatible solutions promises innovation, technological progress and socio-economic development. Decarbonisation is a major step towards regaining strategic energy sovereignty and safeguarding national and regional energy security. This seminar will set out to investigate different aspects of the energy transition and how this might differ depending on the developmental stage and the specific context. We will shed light on how the energy transition is deeply intertwined with societal transformations that require careful and deliberate behavioural shifts to manage demand, shift patterns of consumption and production, and evolve new models of sustainable lifestyles. We will also look at how energy systems can be a major driver for more inclusive and equitable societies and better human and planetary health.

20 August 2023 11:00 - 14:30 | Seminar

Europe's Struggle for Technological Sovereignty and Prosperity

Technological sovereignty has been a central theme in political debate, not least in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic and the Russian war of aggression. Europe has lagged behind major technology powerhouses such as the US and China in creating and sustaining ground-breaking technology companies. In this seminar, we will discuss the main challenges and barriers to innovation European tech companies are facing today. The seminar will also explore the implications of new technologies for the future of European economy, work, inequality, and aspects of ethics of technology. We will discuss on how we can achieve technological sovereignty in Europe, if it is possible, or even desirable as well as how technological sovereignty relates to broader geopolitical and strategic issues around relations with China and the United States, managing complex global supply chains, and conflict dynamics as currently demonstrated in the Ukraine war.

Geopolitical Repercussions of the Russian War on the EU's Eastern Neighbourhood

Russia's war of aggression against Ukraine was a watershed moment for European security and showed that many Western powers were sleepwalking by ignoring the Russian threat and the warning calls from Central Eastern Europe, the Baltics and most of all the EU's Eastern neighbours. The war prompted the European Union to rethink to what extent the Union is prepared to serve as a security provider and geopolitical actor in the region. The seminar discusses the geopolitical implications of the war for the EU's Eastern neighbourhood and Central Asia, reflecting on the Union's performance to date and considering how it should adapt its strategy to the changed geopolitical circumstances to ensure its own and the region's security.

20 August 2023 11:00 - 14:30 | Seminar

Envisioning a Net-Zero Europe: Imagining a Bold, Independent and Sustainable Europe

This seminar is built on the belief that we can't just think about the status quo and how to change faulty systems. We also need positive visions of justice, democracy and ecology that guide us through times of crisis. What if we started a new? Starting from a (literally) blank slate, we'll work in interdisciplinary groups across three large sectors: living spaces; mobility and identity; developing a vision for a net-zero continent. From rethinking public space to new rail infrastructure and a more co-operative European identity, we'll produce a map of Europe that looks very different from today, but might serve as a guiding light for an EU in 2050.

Just Climate Transition or the Energy Race Towards Net Zero Emissions

Addressing climate change requires rapid and just systems transformations at unprecedented scales. The seminar will provide an overview of the scientific and political discussions pertaining to climate justice. Through interactive sessions students will learn about the main approaches to generate climate scenarios and critically reflect upon existing narratives that underpin them. We will illustrate both climate risks and climate opportunities and assess the impact of major climate policies, such as the US Inflation Reduction Act. Emphasis will be given also to the potential of demand-side mitigation and the role of cities and digitalisation for accelerating clean technology diffusion, increase innovation, and democratise the access to basic services.

Feminist Foreign Policy in Practice

Almost a decade after Sweden declared that it would follow a Feminist Foreign Policy, several other countries have adopted similar approaches. Most recently, Germany introduced Feminist Foreign Policy guidelines that seek to make gender equality and women's rights central objectives of Germany's external relations. But how is Feminist Foreign Policy practiced by different countries and what are some of the contradictions between feminist commitments and traditional foreign policy goals? What might Feminist Foreign Policies look like in concrete cases like the Russian war against Ukraine?

Envisioning the Future of Money

This interactive seminar delves into the changing landscape of financial services and monetary systems. We will explore key concepts such as anonymity, technological innovation, accessibility, monetary policy and internationalisation. Following an introduction to money, its characteristics, and the role of central banks, we will research and discuss the strengths, weaknesses and implications of alternative financial systems, cryptocurrencies, blockchain technology, Central Bank Digital Currencies (CBDCs) and corporate digital currencies. Seminar attendees will broaden their perspective on the evolving financial landscape and the potential impact of advances in financial technologies.

20 August 2023 11:00 - 14:30 | Seminar

Global Trade, Sanctions and Weaponisation of Trade

This seminar will explore the societal and political aspects of free trade, including voting behaviour, populism, democratisation, and societal polarisation. We will examine how these factors can impact the success of free trade agreements and the wider implications for society and politics. Additionally, we will delve into the societal aspects of sanctions, exploring their effects on, e. g., democratization and human rights. Finally, we will discuss trade as a weapon, considering its implications in current events such as the Russian war in the Ukraine and the case of China. Through discussion and analysis of current events and academic literature, this seminar will provide attendees with a comprehensive understanding of the complexities surrounding international trade and trade sanctions.

Water Quality and Ecosystem Functioning for Human Survival

The overall objective of this seminar is to work on future perspectives on the putative ‘free’ and ‘guaranteed’ access to water and proper ecosystem functioning. It is examined, how ecosystems will support the provision of sufficient and clean water around the world and how water availability, use and security will change until 2050 and will cope with a predicted world population of 10 billion people. We aim to identify possible strategies for dealing with water use and ecosystem functioning today and in the future - worldwide. We will look at the challenges through a climatological and ecological lens and will also investigate how water influences migratory movements.

European Interests in a Changing World Order: China, the USA, and Like-Minded States

"Right now, there are changes - the likes of which we haven't seen for 100 years - and we are the ones driving these changes together," were the words of Chinese President Xi to Russia's President Putin at their Moscow Meeting in March 2023, with a New World Order outlined in their 2022 joint declaration on "International Relations in a New Era", shortly before Russia invaded Ukraine. The tensions have heated up between those supporting the existing order - under the leadership of the United States - and those who want to revise it, crystallising over Taiwan and elsewhere. The struggle for influence, shaping narratives, and competing on cutting edge, civil-military deployable technology is well underway. In which direction are European countries and the European Union heading in these turbulent times?

How to Revive Multilateralism?

Multilateralism is under attack and out of fashion, yet it is more needed than ever because of present and emerging challenges that require states to work together. This seminar will look at some of the reasons why multilateralism has been failing, why it is still needed, and discuss how it can be revived. It is argued that cooperation in an interconnected world full of “wicked” and complex threats and challenges is realpolitik and in the self-interest of states. Participants will brainstorm on how to make the current international system more fit for purpose. Furthermore, participants will have an opportunity to identify areas where interests between even non-liked states converge, and what can be done both diplomatically and operationally to deal with common transnational problems. In addition to lectures and interactive discussions, participants will have an opportunity to prepare and present positions in preparation for the UN Future Summit as part of a simulation.

20 August 2023 11:00 - 14:30 | Seminar

Responsible AI, Ethics, Law and Society

The deployment of Artificial Intelligence systems in multiple domains of society raises fundamental challenges and concerns, such as accountability, liability, fairness, transparency, privacy and how to protect human rights in the future. The dynamic nature of AI systems requires a new set of skills informed by ethics, law, and policy to be applied throughout the life cycle of such systems: design, development and deployment. Tackling these challenges calls for an interdisciplinary approach: deconstructing these issues by discipline and reconstructing with an integrated mindset, principles and practices between data science, ethics, law, and others, and ongoing collaboration among them.
This seminar aims to do so by bringing students in direct contact with possible effects of AI, and consequently tasking them to reflect and find responses to the AI-induced challenges. The current legal and philosophical debate on AI will serve as benchmark to generate solutions.
The sessions will include lectures, discussions, and group work. No specific background is required, but students are asked to contribute from their specific disciplinary strengths. Students are also asked to accept an intensive series of in-class sessions, and not be afraid of encountering outdoor interactions.

Radicalisation and Extremism: Where Reality Meets the Digital Space

In this seminar, radicalisation and extremism in the digital space is examined, as well as how real-life events, the environment and everyday social challenges contribute to radicalisation processes, and what extremism looks like in an online setting.

Digital spaces affect our daily lives. We share, we watch, we consume, we talk, we believe and we engage. The internet is great, until it isn't, until a violent crime is committed and media reports and politicians jump to the conclusion that an attacker was part of controversial or extremist communities online. But is it always that easy? We will look at extremist communities online to identify how digital spaces can contribute to radicalisation processes. We will also discuss response strategies on the policy, educational and civil society levels.

On Distinctions

We constantly make distinctions. In this seminar, we will discuss the concepts of distinction and difference in general and their role in social, political and scientific discourse in particular.
Are distinctions given or are they created? When, how and why are they introduced in discourse? How are we socialised into distinctions in our education in different societies? We will discuss the distinction between liberal and illiberal democracy, between fact and fiction, science and pseudoscience, truth and error, moral and immoral, sex and gender. These distinctions become relevant when conflicts arise.

Giving Voice to Future Generations in the EU and beyond

The care for future generations should be a common cause across the globe, but our institutions lack the tools to systematically design future-proof policies. The European Union - and its 27 Member States - is no exception to the trend of neglecting the long-term. In today's decision-making, policymakers are not incentivised to think and act with the long-term in mind, and the rights of future generations are underrepresented. This is bad news for future generations, whose lives depend on careful, well-planned responses to existential risks, ranging from environmental collapse to new pandemics, to unregulated AI.

This seminar will offer a unique perspective to all those willing to expand their worldview and think about long-term, future-proofing solutions to the many complex issues we face. The goal is to stimulate discussion and generate concrete ideas - through a series of brainstorming, fishbowls and simulations - to integrate the interests of future generations into policymaking processes in both the EU and elsewhere. The end goal is to contribute to the foundations for both a research and advocacy agenda on long-term governance in the European Union and beyond.

Euregio Walk on the Challenges of Climate Change

Energy transition and climate protection are inextricably linked. It is crucial to understand which scenarios the Euregio Tyrol-South Tyrol-Trentino will face, and how both ecologically and economically successful countermeasures can be taken. The hike with the three provincial Governors of Euregio leads from the Congress Centrum along the Mittlerer H?henweg to the Zirmalm in Inneralpbach. There the climate simulator of the FH Kufstein can be tested.

//INFO: Hike to Zirmalm. Bring hiking shoes and water. In case of heavy rain, there is going to be a shuttle to Zirmalm.

Strategic Foresight: How to Use Futures for Decision Making

In a complex world, the first reaction is to try to control what is coming. However, the future is unknowable. Prediction and planning, even though useful, are limiting ways to work with the future in the present, because they aim at 'knowing' a 'future'. The future exists in the plural, and the right verb for futures is not 'know', it's 'use'. Strategic foresight is the key to using them. In this course we will introduce the concepts and build an initial capability to use futures for decision making.

Financial Planning: How to Become Financially Literate

This seminar raises the participants' awareness for economic challenges and fosters their competences to make sound financial decisions. Based on a self-assessment, students learn about various financial goals and basic principles of budgeting and financial planning. There will also be explained the foundations of financing and investing with a special emphasis on various investment opportunities. Furthermore, the students learn how to invest money with a strong focus on retirement saving. The approach is based on diversification among several asset classes as well as on lump sum investments or cost averaging. The students will eventually be able to set up a target asset allocation and create portfolios using securities existing on the capital market.

Mindfulness: A Critical Appreciation in Times of Climate Crisis

Industrialisation has produced specific styles of perception, which can be characterised as an 'economy of attention': a purposeful orientation of human perception towards predetermined areas, while fading out the periphery of what is perceived or the context of action. Mindfulness, on the other hand, opens up perception to the periphery and to internal and external contexts. And this is exactly what is needed to deal with the climate crisis: the ability to include the consequences of action as comprehensively as possible. The seminar aims to exemplify these connections through practical exercises as well as theoretical input.

Making Progress in Polarised Times

Social cohesion even in highly developed democracies seems endangered by polarised political and social forces and tendencies. How can political decision-makers, but also members of civil society and politically active citizens contribute to bridging the growing social and ideological divide and strengthening social cohesion; at a time when the pressure on societies is increasing dramatically due to poly-crises and a growing inequality?

This seminar gives in practical examples and exercises an overview of the drivers of polarisation and teaches methods and skills to navigate polarised situations effectively. The seminar is informed by research from leading polarisation experts and designed with best-practice adult learning.

Re-Imagine Cooperation: Build Your Essential Negotiation Skills

Claiming your place at the negotiation table and actively shaping today's world and our future: The ability to successfully negotiate, to communicate, to cooperate and find solutions for emerging conflicts are essential for cooperating in a peaceful manner and across generations.

Practice applying the Vienna School Negotiation Toolbox such as Harvard's Principled Negotiations for preparing, strategizing and managing difficult situations, the Process Communication Model for navigating relationships and increased self-efficacy as well as Compassionate Accountability for dealing with conflicts without casualties.

Join the learning partnership by featuring Harvard case simulations, exercises and real-life situations, designed to provide hands-on experience and help integrate these tools into your daily lives. Start your negotiator journey now.

Sound Matters. Are You Listening?

Sound occurs when something, anything, vibrates. For there to be sound, there must be vibration. The consequences, however, go beyond sound. They also have political and societal impact when experienced by humans and non-humans. This seminar will explore how sound shapes environments and investigate why listening is as important as looking when trying to understand how places are constructed. We will also investigate the ways soundscapes are changing due to human impacts and why focusing on the sonic world can reveal the uneven power relations which structure society, exploring the soundscapes of Alpbach. We will create our own sound project using sounds recorded during the week to examine the relationship between people, place and the sonic environment.

The Art of Being Spontaneous – Improvisation in Music and Beyond

We all do improvisation - physically, musically, theatrically, and mentally in order to learn what we need. Being part of a group, being in the room, leading, following, deconstructing and creating - all together, all on the spot, is what makes it improvised. As professional musicians from MUK we will share our expertise: deep listening, meaningful reaction and creative collaboration. You don't have musical skills or play an instrument? That's great, because we want to have as many specialists from various fields to jump into the deep end and allow synergies of all kinds to blossom. Please bring an open mind to leave your comfort zone. Will we create an improvisation show together? Let's find out!

Playfully Serious, Hands-On: Housing of the Future

In this interactive seminar we will experiment and discuss concepts regarding the housing of the future. In a world that is dominated by crises, climate change and scarcity of resources it is necessary to develop strategies for a built environment that is sustainable and circular, that enables social inclusion and empowers people. By visiting best practice projects and by experiencing and reflecting together on the built environment in Alpbach, we will develop skills and awareness on how to use available resources, such as existing buildings and materials. Playful hands-on approaches, different means of architectural expression and 1:1 spatial experiments will help us in our enquiry to opening new perspectives on the housing of the future.

Feeling Safe (Is Key)

A sense of safety and security is essential in actor training. Work can be very demanding and challenging as students need to be present and emotionally available, at times using their own experiences for creation. As such it is important that they do not feel exposed. This peer-to-peer seminar with students from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art will share the training aspects that allow them to be vulnerable by creating a safe environment.

Keep It in the Ground: Diffusing Carbon Bombs

A skill we thought we might never need is currently in high demand: that of diffusing - not literal but so-called -"carbon bombs". If all fossil fuel extraction infrastructure projects ("carbon bombs") that are currently in the pipeline are realised, the 1.5 celsius climate goal is under extreme threat. Carbon emissions must fall by half by 2030 to preserve the chance of a liveable future, the IPCC states, and therefore decisive and effective action is needed. This seminar will enable you to take your first steps towards designing effective climate action campaigns aimed at promoting the non-extraction of further fossil fuels.

Working Together (Spells Success)

In actor training, students are first introduced to the concept of ensemble. Artistic endeavours in the field of acting are very much a group activity. This is why the more proficient students become at collaborating as a group, the better they perform individually. In this peer-to-peer seminar with students from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, you will be introduced to exercises and games, fostering seamless and poetic group work - a stepping stone for our democratic society.

A Deep Dive into the Global Fashion Industry

During five days of crafty interactions and peer-to-peer learning, we will take a deep dive into the global fashion industry. We will discuss the topics of responsibility, transparency, and accountability as a holistic approach towards an innovative fashion future. We will learn about the initiative Fashion Revolution Global, and opportunities to be involved in activities around activism, change making and education in sustainable fashion. We will also meet local makers who will give us insights into their supply chains, as well as passing on some of their treasured craft skills. Bring your unwanted clothes and sneakers to Alpbach and reinvent them with us!

Creative Writing: How to Be Bold with Your Words

In an expanding culture of AI technology, we can understandably be suspicious about anything supposedly ‘created’. This seminar explores the benefits of creative writing as a means to experiment, to develop confidence, to investigate verbal expression, and to find fluidity with words. We will learn how to worry less about the ‘right way’ of saying something. We will share our language skills and learn how to write more boldly. Most importantly we will realise the value of learning through play, understand the value of creativity in all fields of work and how creative language is essential in expressing ideas.

Global Trade, Sanctions and Weaponisation of Trade

This seminar will explore the societal and political aspects of free trade, including voting behaviour, populism, democratisation, and societal polarisation. We will examine how these factors can impact the success of free trade agreements and the wider implications for society and politics. Additionally, we will delve into the societal aspects of sanctions, exploring their effects on, e.g., democratization and human rights. Finally, we will discuss trade as a weapon, considering its implications in current events such as the Russian war in the Ukraine and the case of China. Through discussion and analysis of current events and academic literature, this seminar will provide attendees with a comprehensive understanding of the complexities surrounding international trade and trade sanctions.

European Interests in a Changing World Order: China, the USA, and Like-Minded States

"Right now, there are changes - the likes of which we haven't seen for 100 years - and we are the ones driving these changes together," were the words of Chinese President Xi to Russia's President Putin at their Moscow Meeting in March 2023, with a New World Order outlined in their 2022 joint declaration on "International Relations in a New Era", shortly before Russia invaded Ukraine. The tensions have heated up between those supporting the existing order - under the leadership of the United States - and those who want to revise it, crystallising over Taiwan and elsewhere. The struggle for influence, shaping narratives, and competing on cutting edge, civil-military deployable technology is well underway. In which direction are European countries and the European Union heading in these turbulent times?

On Distinctions

We constantly make distinctions. In this seminar, we will discuss the concepts of distinction and difference in general and their role in social, political and scientific discourse in particular.

Are distinctions given or are they created? When, how and why are they introduced in discourse? How are we socialised into distinctions in our education in different societies? We will discuss the distinction between liberal and illiberal democracy, between fact and fiction, science and pseudoscience, truth and error, moral and immoral, sex and gender. These distinctions become relevant when conflicts arise.

Water Quality and Ecosystem Functioning for Human Survival

The overall objective of this seminar is to work on future perspectives on the putative 'free' and 'guaranteed' access to water and proper ecosystem functioning. It is examined, how ecosystems will support the provision of sufficient and clean water around the world and how water availability, use and security will change until 2050 and will cope with a predicted world population of 10 billion people. We aim to identify possible strategies for dealing with water use and ecosystem functioning today and in the future - worldwide. We will look at the challenges through a climatological and ecological lens and will also investigate how water influences migratory movements.

Entrepreneuring the Sustainable Future

Join us for five days of exploring how entrepreneurial spirit can contribute to tackling grand challenges of climate change.

Through an immersive learning experience, participants will gain a deep understanding of how innovative business models can generate societal and environmental benefits and simultaneously be economically self-sustaining. As the seminar relies on collaboration, it will benefit from participants from a wide variety of disciplines and experiences coming together. Participants will identify problems, design solutions and develop them into entrepreneurial opportunities to shape a better tomorrow.

Feminist Foreign Policy in Practice

Almost a decade after Sweden declared that it would follow a Feminist Foreign Policy, several other countries have adopted similar approaches. Most recently, Germany introduced Feminist Foreign Policy guidelines that seek to make gender equality and women's rights central objectives of Germany's external relations. But how is Feminist Foreign Policy practiced by different countries and what are some of the contradictions between feminist commitments and traditional foreign policy goals? What might Feminist Foreign Policies look like in concrete cases like the Russian war against Ukraine?

The Many-Faceted Dimension of Energy Transitions

The transformation of energy systems towards climate-compatible solutions promises innovation, technological progress and socio-economic development. Decarbonisation is a major step towards regaining strategic energy sovereignty and safeguarding national and regional energy security. This seminar will set out to investigate different aspects of the energy transition and how this might differ depending on the developmental stage and the specific context. We will shed light on how the energy transition is deeply intertwined with societal transformations that require careful and deliberate behavioural shifts to manage demand, shift patterns of consumption and production, and evolve new models of sustainable lifestyles. We will also look at how energy systems can be a major driver for more inclusive and equitable societies and better human and planetary health.

Radicalisation and Extremism: Where Reality Meets the Digital Space

In this seminar, radicalisation and extremism in the digital space is examined, as well as how real-life events, the environment and everyday social challenges contribute to radicalisation processes, and what extremism looks like in an online setting.

Digital spaces affect our daily lives. We share, we watch, we consume, we talk, we believe and we engage. The internet is great, until it isn't, until a violent crime is committed and media reports and politicians jump to the conclusion that an attacker was part of controversial or extremist communities online. But is it always that easy? We will look at extremist communities online to identify how digital spaces can contribute to radicalisation processes. We will also discuss response strategies on the policy, educational and civil society levels.

Europe's Struggle for Technological Sovereignty and Prosperity

Technological sovereignty has been a central theme in political debate, not least in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic and the Russian war of aggression. Europe has lagged behind major technology powerhouses such as the US and China in creating and sustaining ground-breaking technology companies. In this seminar, we will discuss the main challenges and barriers to innovation European tech companies are facing today. The seminar will also explore the implications of new technologies for the future of European economy, work, inequality, and aspects of ethics of technology. We will discuss on how we can achieve technological sovereignty in Europe, if it is possible, or even desirable as well as how technological sovereignty relates to broader geopolitical and strategic issues around relations with China and the United States, managing complex global supply chains, and conflict dynamics as currently demonstrated in the Ukraine war.

Giving Voice to Future Generations in the EU and beyond

The care for future generations should be a common cause across the globe, but our institutions lack the tools to systematically design future-proof policies. The European Union - and its 27 Member States - is no exception to the trend of neglecting the long-term. In today’s decision-making, policymakers are not incentivised to think and act with the long-term in mind, and the rights of future generations are underrepresented. This is bad news for future generations, whose lives depend on careful, well-planned responses to existential risks, ranging from environmental collapse to new pandemics, to unregulated AI.

This seminar will offer a unique perspective to all those willing to expand their worldview and think about long-term, future-proofing solutions to the many complex issues we face. The goal is to stimulate discussion and generate concrete ideas - through a series of brainstorming, fishbowls and simulations - to integrate the interests of future generations into policymaking processes in both the EU and elsewhere. The end goal is to contribute to the foundations for both a research and advocacy agenda on long-term governance in the European Union and beyond.

Geopolitical Repercussions of the Russian War on the EU’s Eastern Neighbourhood

Russia’s war of aggression against Ukraine was a watershed moment for European security and showed that many Western powers were sleepwalking by ignoring the Russian threat and the warning calls from Central Eastern Europe, the Baltics and most of all the EU’s Eastern neighbours. The war prompted the European Union to rethink to what extent the Union is prepared to serve as a security provider and geopolitical actor in the region. The seminar discusses the geopolitical implications of the war for the EU’s Eastern neighbourhood and Central Asia, reflecting on the Union’s performance to date and considering how it should adapt its strategy to the changed geopolitical circumstances to ensure its own and the region’s security.

Just Climate Transition or the Energy Race Towards Net Zero Emissions

Addressing climate change requires rapid and just systemic transformations at an unprecedented scale. The seminar will provide an overview of the scientific and political discussions pertaining to climate justice. Through interactive sessions students will learn about the main approaches to generate climate scenarios and critically reflect upon existing narratives that underpin them. We will illustrate both climate risks and climate opportunities and assess the impact of major climate policies, such as the US Inflation Reduction Act. Emphasis will be given also to the potential of the demand-side mitigation and the role of cities and digitalisation in accelerating clean technology diffusion, increasing innovation, and democratising the access to basic services.

Responsible AI, Ethics, Law and Society

The deployment of Artificial Intelligence systems in multiple domains of society raises fundamental challenges and concerns, such as accountability, liability, fairness, transparency, privacy and how to protect human rights in the future. The dynamic nature of AI systems requires a new set of skills informed by ethics, law, and policy to be applied throughout the life cycle of such systems: design, development and deployment. Tackling these challenges calls for an interdisciplinary approach: deconstructing these issues by discipline and reconstructing with an integrated mindset, principles and practices between data science, ethics, law, and others, and ongoing collaboration among them.

This course aims to do so by bringing students in direct contact with possible effects of AI, and consequently tasking them to reflect and find responses to the AI-induced challenges. The current legal and philosophical debate on AI will serve as benchmark to generate solutions.

The sessions will include lectures, discussions, and group work. No specific background is required, but students are asked to contribute from their specific disciplinary strengths. Students are also asked to accept an intensive series of in-class sessions, and not be afraid of encountering outdoor interactions.

Envisioning a Net-Zero Europe: Imagining a Bold, Independent and Sustainable Europe

This seminar is built on the belief that we can't just think about the status quo and how to change faulty systems. We also need positive visions of justice, democracy and ecology that guide us through times of crisis. What if we started a new? Starting from a (literally) blank slate, we'll work in interdisciplinary groups across three large sectors: living spaces; mobility and identity; developing a vision for a net-zero continent. From rethinking public space to new rail infrastructure and a more co-operative European identity, we'll produce a map of Europe that looks very different from today, but might serve as a guiding light for an EU in 2050.

Financial Planning: How to Become Financially Literate

This seminar raises the participants' awareness for economic challenges and fosters their competences to make sound financial decisions. Based on a self-assessment, students learn about various financial goals and basic principles of budgeting and financial planning. There will also be explained the foundations of financing and investing with a special emphasis on various investment opportunities. Furthermore, the students learn how to invest money with a strong focus on retirement saving. The approach is based on diversification among several asset classes as well as on lump sum investments or cost averaging. The students will eventually be able to set up a target asset allocation and create portfolios using securities existing on the capital market.

Playfully Serious, Hands-On: Housing of the Future

In this interactive seminar we will experiment and discuss concepts regarding the housing of the future. In a world that is dominated by crises, climate change and scarcity of resources it is necessary to develop strategies for a built environment that is sustainable and circular, that enables social inclusion and empowers people. By visiting best practice projects and by experiencing and reflecting together on the built environment in Alpbach, we will develop skills and awareness on how to use available resources, such as existing buildings and materials. Playful hands-on approaches, different means of architectural expression and 1:1 spatial experiments will help us in our enquiry to opening new perspectives on the housing of the future.

Strategic Foresight: How to Use Futures for Decision Making

In a complex world, the first reaction is to try to control what is coming. However, the future is unknowable. Prediction and planning, even though useful, are limiting ways to work with the future in the present, because they aim at 'knowing' a 'future'. The future exists in the plural, and the right verb for futures is not 'know', it's 'use'. Strategic foresight is the key to using them. In this course we will introduce the concepts and build an initial capability to use futures for decision making.

Making Progress in Polarised Times

Social cohesion even in highly developed democracies seems endangered by polarised political and social forces and tendencies. How can political decision-makers, but also members of civil society and politically active citizens contribute to bridging the growing social and ideological divide and strengthening social cohesion; at a time when the pressure on societies is increasing dramatically due to poly-crises and a growing inequality?

This seminar gives in practical examples and exercises an overview of the drivers of polarisation and teaches methods and skills to navigate polarised situations effectively. The seminar is informed by research from leading polarisation experts and designed with best-practice adult learning.

Sound Matters. Are You Listening?

Sound occurs when something, anything, vibrates. For there to be sound, there must be vibration. The consequences, however, go beyond sound. They also have political and societal impact when experienced by humans and non-humans. This seminar will explore how sound shapes environments and investigate why listening is as important as looking when trying to understand how places are constructed. We will also investigate the ways soundscapes are changing due to human impacts and why focusing on the sonic world can reveal the uneven power relations which structure society, exploring the soundscapes of Alpbach. We will create our own sound project using sounds recorded during the week to examine the relationship between people, place and the sonic environment.

The Art of Being Spontaneous – Improvisation in Music and Beyond

We all do improvisation - physically, musically, theatrically, and mentally in order to learn what we need. Being part of a group, being in the room, leading, following, deconstructing and creating - all together, all on the spot, is what makes it improvised. As professional musicians from MUK we will share our expertise: deep listening, meaningful reaction and creative collaboration. You don't have musical skills or play an instrument? That's great, because we want to have as many specialists from various fields to jump into the deep end and allow synergies of all kinds to blossom. Please bring an open mind to leave your comfort zone. Will we create an improvisation show together? Let's find out!

Mindfulness: A Critical Appreciation in Times of Climate Crisis

Industrialisation has produced specific styles of perception, which can be characterised as an 'economy of attention': a purposeful orientation of human perception towards predetermined areas, while fading out the periphery of what is perceived or the context of action. Mindfulness, on the other hand, opens up perception to the periphery and to internal and external contexts. And this is exactly what is needed to deal with the climate crisis: the ability to include the consequences of action as comprehensively as possible. The seminar aims to exemplify these connections through practical exercises as well as theoretical input.

Keep It in the Ground: Diffusing Carbon Bombs

A skill we thought we might never need is currently in high demand: that of diffusing - not literal but so-called -"carbon bombs". If all fossil fuel extraction infrastructure projects ("carbon bombs") that are currently in the pipeline are realised, the 1.5 celsius climate goal is under extreme threat. Carbon emissions must fall by half by 2030 to preserve the chance of a liveable future, the IPCC states, and therefore decisive and effective action is needed. This seminar will enable you to take your first steps towards designing effective climate action campaigns aimed at promoting the non-extraction of further fossil fuels.

In an expanding culture of AI technology, we can understandably be suspicious about anything supposedly 'created'. This seminar explores the benefits of creative writing as a means to experiment, to develop confidence, to investigate verbal expression, and to find fluidity with words. We will learn how to worry less about the 'right way' of saying something. We will share our language skills and learn how to write more boldly. Most importantly we will realise the value of learning through play, understand the value of creativity in all fields of work and how creative language is essential in expressing ideas.

Additionally, we will delve into the societal aspects of sanctions, exploring their effects on, e.g., democratization and human rights. Finally, we will discuss trade as a weapon, considering its implications in current events such as the Russian war in the Ukraine and the case of China. Through discussion and analysis of current events and academic literature, this seminar will provide attendees with a comprehensive understanding of the complexities surrounding international trade and trade sanctions.

Envisioning a Net-Zero Europe: Imagining a Bold, Independent and Sustainable Europe

This seminar is built on the belief that we can't just think about the status quo and how to change faulty systems. We also need positive visions of justice, democracy and ecology that guide us through times of crisis. What if we started a new? Starting from a (literally) blank slate, we'll work in interdisciplinary groups across three large sectors: living spaces; mobility and identity; developing a vision for a net-zero continent. From rethinking public space to new rail infrastructure and a more co-operative European identity, we'll produce a map of Europe that looks very different from today, but might serve as a guiding light for an EU in 2050.

Feminist Foreign Policy in Practice

Almost a decade after Sweden declared that it would follow a Feminist Foreign Policy, several other countries have adopted similar approaches. Most recently, Germany introduced Feminist Foreign Policy guidelines that seek to make gender equality and women's rights central objectives of Germany's external relations. But how is Feminist Foreign Policy practiced by different countries and what are some of the contradictions between feminist commitments and traditional foreign policy goals? What might Feminist Foreign Policies look like in concrete cases like the Russian war against Ukraine?

Europe’s Struggle for Technological Sovereignty and Prosperity

Technological sovereignty has been a central theme in political debate, not least in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic and the Russian war of aggression. Europe has lagged behind major technology powerhouses such as the US and China in creating and sustaining ground-breaking technology companies. In this seminar, we will discuss the main challenges and barriers to innovation European tech companies are facing today. The seminar will also explore the implications of new technologies for the future of European economy, work, inequality, and aspects of ethics of technology. We will discuss on how we can achieve technological sovereignty in Europe, if it is possible, or even desirable as well as how technological sovereignty relates to broader geopolitical and strategic issues around relations with China and the United States, managing complex global supply chains, and conflict dynamics as currently demonstrated in the Ukraine war.

Responsible AI, Ethics, Law and Society

The deployment of Artificial Intelligence systems in multiple domains of society raises fundamental challenges and concerns, such as accountability, liability, fairness, transparency, privacy and how to protect human rights in the future. The dynamic nature of AI systems requires a new set of skills informed by ethics, law, and policy to be applied throughout the life cycle of such systems: design, development and deployment. Tackling these challenges calls for an interdisciplinary approach: deconstructing these issues by discipline and reconstructing with an integrated mindset, principles and practices between data science, ethics, law, and others, and ongoing collaboration among them.

This course aims to do so by bringing students in direct contact with possible effects of AI, and consequently tasking them to reflect and find responses to the AI-induced challenges. The current legal and philosophical debate on AI will serve as benchmark to generate solutions. The sessions will include lectures, discussions, and group work. No specific background is required, but students are asked to contribute from their specific disciplinary strengths. Students are also asked to accept an intensive series of in-class sessions, and not be afraid of encountering outdoor interactions.

Radicalisation and Extremism: Where Reality Meets the Digital Space

In this seminar, radicalisation and extremism in the digital space is examined, as well as how real-life events, the environment and everyday social challenges contribute to radicalisation processes, and what extremism looks like in an online setting.

Digital spaces affect our daily lives. We share, we watch, we consume, we talk, we believe and we engage. The internet is great, until it isn’t, until a violent crime is committed and media reports and politicians jump to the conclusion that an attacker was part of controversial or extremist communities online. But is it always that easy? We will look at extremist communities online to identify how digital spaces can contribute to radicalisation processes. We will also discuss response strategies on the policy, educational and civil society levels.

How to Revive Multilateralism?

Multilateralism is under attack and out of fashion, yet it is more needed than ever because of present and emerging challenges that require states to work together. This seminar will look at some of the reasons why multilateralism has been failing, why it is still needed, and discuss how it can be revived. It is argued that cooperation in an interconnected world full of “wicked” and complex threats and challenges is realpolitik and in the self-interest of states. Participants will brainstorm on how to make the current international system more fit for purpose. Furthermore, participants will have an opportunity to identify areas where interests between even non-liked states converge, and what can be done both diplomatically and operationally to deal with common transnational problems. In addition to lectures and interactive discussions, participants will have an opportunity to prepare and present positions in preparation for the UN Future Summit as part of a simulation.

On Distinctions

We constantly make distinctions. In this seminar, we will discuss the concepts of distinction and difference in general and their role in social, political and scientific discourse in particular.

Are distinctions given or are they created? When, how and why are they introduced in discourse? How are we socialised into distinctions in our education in different societies? We will discuss the distinction between liberal and illiberal democracy, between fact and fiction, science and pseudoscience, truth and error, moral and immoral, sex and gender. These distinctions become relevant when conflicts arise.

Geopolitical Repercussions of the Russian War on the EU's Eastern Neighbourhood

Russia’s war of aggression against Ukraine was a watershed moment for European security and showed that many Western powers were sleepwalking by ignoring the Russian threat and the warning calls from Central Eastern Europe, the Baltics and most of all the EU’s Eastern neighbours. The war prompted the European Union to rethink to what extent the Union is prepared to serve as a security provider and geopolitical actor in the region. The seminar discusses the geopolitical implications of the war for the EU’s Eastern neighbourhood and Central Asia, reflecting on the Union’s performance to date and considering how it should adapt its strategy to the changed geopolitical circumstances to ensure its own and the region’s security.

Giving Voice to Future Generations in the EU and beyond

The care for future generations should be a common cause across the globe, but our institutions lack the tools to systematically design future-proof policies. The European Union - and its 27 Member States - is no exception to the trend of neglecting the long-term. In today’s decision-making, policymakers are not incentivised to think and act with the long-term in mind, and the rights of future generations are underrepresented. This is bad news for future generations, whose lives depend on careful, well-planned responses to existential risks, ranging from environmental collapse to new pandemics, to unregulated AI.

This seminar will offer a unique perspective to all those willing to expand their worldview and think about long-term, future-proofing solutions to the many complex issues we face. The goal is to stimulate discussion and generate concrete ideas - through a series of brainstorming, fishbowls and simulations - to integrate the interests of future generations into policymaking processes in both the EU and elsewhere. The end goal is to contribute to the foundations for both a research and advocacy agenda on long-term governance in the European Union and beyond.

Just Climate Transition or the Energy Race Towards Net Zero Emissions

Addressing climate change requires rapid and just systemic transformations at an unprecedented scale. The seminar will provide an overview of the scientific and political discussions pertaining to climate justice. Through interactive sessions students will learn about the main approaches to generate climate scenarios and critically reflect upon existing narratives that underpin them. We will illustrate both climate risks and climate opportunities and assess the impact of major climate policies, such as the US Inflation Reduction Act. Emphasis will be given also to the potential of the demand-side mitigation and the role of cities and digitalisation in accelerating clean technology diffusion, increasing innovation, and democratising the access to basic services.

Playfully Serious, Hands-On: Housing of the Future

In this interactive seminar we will experiment and discuss concepts regarding the housing of the future. In a world that is dominated by crises, climate change and scarcity of resources it is necessary to develop strategies for a built environment that is sustainable and circular, that enables social inclusion and empowers people. By visiting best practice projects and by experiencing and reflecting together on the built environment in Alpbach, we will develop skills and awareness on how to use available resources, such as existing buildings and materials. Playful hands-on approaches, different means of architectural expression and 1:1 spatial experiments will help us in our enquiry to opening new perspectives on the housing of the future.

Financial Planning: How to Become Financially Literate

This seminar raises the participants' awareness for economic challenges and fosters their competences to make sound financial decisions. Based on a self-assessment, students learn about various financial goals and basic principles of budgeting and financial planning. There will also be explained the foundations of financing and investing with a special emphasis on various investment opportunities. Furthermore, the students learn how to invest money with a strong focus on retirement saving. The approach is based on diversification among several asset classes as well as on lump sum investments or cost averaging. The students will eventually be able to set up a target asset allocation and create portfolios using securities existing on the capital market.

The Art of Being Spontaneous – Improvisation in Music and Beyond

We all do improvisation - physically, musically, theatrically, and mentally in order to learn what we need. Being part of a group, being in the room, leading, following, deconstructing and creating - all together, all on the spot, is what makes it improvised. As professional musicians from MUK we will share our expertise: deep listening, meaningful reaction and creative collaboration. You don't have musical skills or play an instrument? That's great, because we want to have as many specialists from various fields to jump into the deep end and allow synergies of all kinds to blossom. Please bring an open mind to leave your comfort zone. Will we create an improvisation show together? Let's find out!

Creative Writing: How to Be Bold with Your Words

In an expanding culture of AI technology, we can understandably be suspicious about anything supposedly 'created'. This seminar explores the benefits of creative writing as a means to experiment, to develop confidence, to investigate verbal expression, and to find fluidity with words. We will learn how to worry less about the 'right way' of saying something. We will share our language skills and learn how to write more boldly. Most importantly we will realise the value of learning through play, understand the value of creativity in all fields of work and how creative language is essential in expressing ideas.

Mindfulness: A Critical Appreciation in Times of Climate Crisis

Industrialisation has produced specific styles of perception, which can be characterised as an 'economy of attention': a purposeful orientation of human perception towards predetermined areas, while fading out the periphery of what is perceived or the context of action. Mindfulness, on the other hand, opens up perception to the periphery and to internal and external contexts. And this is exactly what is needed to deal with the climate crisis: the ability to include the consequences of action as comprehensively as possible. The seminar aims to exemplify these connections through practical exercises as well as theoretical input.

Making Progress in Polarised Times

Social cohesion even in highly developed democracies seems endangered by polarised political and social forces and tendencies. How can political decision-makers, but also members of civil society and politically active citizens contribute to bridging the growing social and ideological divide and strengthening social cohesion; at a time when the pressure on societies is increasing dramatically due to poly-crises and a growing inequality? This seminar gives in practical examples and exercises an overview of the drivers of polarisation and teaches methods and skills to navigate polarised situations effectively. The seminar is informed by research from leading polarisation experts and designed with best-practice adult learning.

Keep It in the Ground: Diffusing Carbon Bombs

A skill we thought we might never need is currently in high demand: that of diffusing - not literal but so-called -"carbon bombs". If all fossil fuel extraction infrastructure projects ("carbon bombs") that are currently in the pipeline are realised, the 1.5 celsius climate goal is under extreme threat. Carbon emissions must fall by half by 2030 to preserve the chance of a liveable future, the IPCC states, and therefore decisive and effective action is needed. This seminar will enable you to take your first steps towards designing effective climate action campaigns aimed at promoting the non-extraction of further fossil fuels.

Strategic Foresight: How to Use Futures for Decision Making

In a complex world, the first reaction is to try to control what is coming. However, the future is unknowable. Prediction and planning, even though useful, are limiting ways to work with the future in the present, because they aim at 'knowing' a 'future'. The future exists in the plural, and the right verb for futures is not 'know', it's 'use'. Strategic foresight is the key to using them. In this course we will introduce the concepts and build an initial capability to use futures for decision making.

Sound Matters. Are You Listening?

Sound occurs when something, anything, vibrates. For there to be sound, there must be vibration. The consequences, however, go beyond sound. They also have political and societal impact when experienced by humans and non-humans. This seminar will explore how sound shapes environments and investigate why listening is as important as looking when trying to understand how places are constructed. We will also investigate the ways soundscapes are changing due to human impacts and why focusing on the sonic world can reveal the uneven power relations which structure society, exploring the soundscapes of Alpbach. We will create our own sound project using sounds recorded during the week to examine the relationship between people, place and the sonic environment.

The Many-Faceted Dimension of Energy Transitions

The transformation of energy systems towards climate-compatible solutions promises innovation, technological progress and socio-economic development. Decarbonisation is a major step towards regaining strategic energy sovereignty and safeguarding national and regional energy security. This seminar will set out to investigate different aspects of the energy transition and how this might differ depending on the developmental stage and the specific context. We will shed light on how the energy transition is deeply intertwined with societal transformations that require careful and deliberate behavioural shifts to manage demand, shift patterns of consumption and production, and evolve new models of sustainable lifestyles. We will also look at how energy systems can be a major driver for more inclusive and equitable societies and better human and planetary health.

European Interests in a Changing World Order: China, the USA, and Like-Minded States

"Right now, there are changes - the likes of which we haven't seen for 100 years - and we are the ones driving these changes together," were the words of Chinese President Xi to Russia's President Putin at their Moscow Meeting in March 2023, with a New World Order outlined in their 2022 joint declaration on "International Relations in a New Era", shortly before Russia invaded Ukraine. The tensions have heated up between those supporting the existing order - under the leadership of the United States - and those who want to revise it, crystallising over Taiwan and elsewhere. The struggle for influence, shaping narratives, and competing on cutting edge, civil-military deployable technology is well underway. How to Revive Multilateralism?

Multilateralism is under attack and out of fashion, yet it is more needed than ever because of present and emerging challenges that require states to work together. This seminar will look at some of the reasons why multilateralism has been failing, why it is still needed, and discuss how it can be revived. It is argued that cooperation in an interconnected world full of "wicked" and complex threats and challenges is realpolitik and in the self-interest of states. Participants will brainstorm on how to make the current international system more fit for purpose. Furthermore, participants will have an opportunity to identify areas where interests between even non-liked states converge, and what can be done both diplomatically and operationally to deal with common transnational problems. In addition to lectures and interactive discussions, participants will have an opportunity to prepare and present positions in preparation for the UN Future Summit as part of a simulation.

On Distinctions

We constantly make distinctions. In this seminar, we will discuss the concepts of distinction and difference in general and their role in social, political and scientific discourse in particular.

Are distinctions given or are they created? When, how and why are they introduced in discourse? How are we socialised into distinctions in our education in different societies? We will discuss the distinction between liberal and illiberal democracy, between fact and fiction, science and pseudoscience, truth and error, moral and immoral, sex and gender. These distinctions become relevant when conflicts arise.

Geopolitical Repercussions of the Russian War on the EU's Eastern Neighbourhood

Russia's war of aggression against Ukraine was a watershed moment for European security and showed that many Western powers were sleepwalking by ignoring the Russian threat and the warning calls from Central Eastern Europe, the Baltics and most of all the EU's Eastern neighbours. The war prompted the European Union to rethink to what extent the Union is prepared to serve as a security provider and geopolitical actor in the region. The seminar discusses the geopolitical implications of the war for the EU's Eastern neighbourhood and Central Asia, reflecting on the Union's performance to date and considering how it should adapt its strategy to the changed geopolitical circumstances to ensure its own and the region's security.

Giving Voice to Future Generations in the EU and beyond

The care for future generations should be a common cause across the globe, but our institutions lack the tools to systematically design future-proof policies. The European Union - and its 27 Member States - is no exception to the trend of neglecting the long-term. In today's decision-making, policymakers are not incentivised to think and act with the long-term in mind, and the rights of future generations are underrepresented. This is bad news for future generations, whose lives depend on careful, well-planned responses to existential risks, ranging from environmental collapse to new pandemics, to unregulated AI.

This seminar will offer a unique perspective to all those willing to expand their worldview and think about long-term, future-proofing solutions to the many complex issues we face. The goal is to stimulate discussion and generate concrete ideas - through a series of brainstorming, fishbowls and simulations - to integrate the interests of future generations into policymaking processes in both the EU and elsewhere. The end goal is to contribute to the foundations for both a research and advocacy agenda on long-term governance in the European Union and beyond.

Just Climate Transition or the Energy Race Towards Net Zero Emissions

Addressing climate change requires rapid and just systemic transformations at an unprecedented scale. The seminar will provide an overview of the scientific and political discussions pertaining to climate justice. Through interactive sessions students will learn about the main approaches to generate climate scenarios and critically reflect upon existing narratives that underpin them. We will illustrate both climate risks and climate opportunities and assess the impact of major climate policies, such as the US Inflation Reduction Act. Emphasis will be given also to the potential of the demand-side mitigation and the role of cities and digitalisation in accelerating clean technology diffusion, increasing innovation, and democratising the access to basic services.

Water Quality and Ecosystem Functioning for Human Survival

The overall objective of this seminar is to work on future perspectives on the putative 'free' and 'guaranteed' access to water and proper ecosystem functioning. It is examined, how ecosystems will support the provision of sufficient and clean water around the world and how water availability, use and security will change until 2050 and will cope with a predicted world population of 10 billion people. We aim to identify possible strategies for dealing with water use and ecosystem functioning today and in the future - worldwide. We will look at the challenges through a climatological and ecological lens and will also investigate how water influences migratory movements.

Playfully Serious, Hands-On: Housing of the Future

In this interactive seminar we will experiment and discuss concepts regarding the housing of the future. In a world that is dominated by crises, climate change and scarcity of resources it is necessary to develop strategies for a built environment that is sustainable and circular, that enables social inclusion and empowers people. By visiting best practice projects and by experiencing and reflecting together on the built environment in Alpbach, we will develop skills and awareness on how to use available resources, such as existing buildings and materials. Playful hands-on approaches, different means of architectural expression and 1:1 spatial experiments will help us in our enquiry to opening new perspectives on the housing of the future.

Working Together (Spells Success)

In actor training, students are first introduced to the concept of ensemble. Artistic endeavours in the field of acting are very much a group activity. This is why the more proficient students become at collaborating as a group, the better they perform individually. In this peer-to-peer seminar with students from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, you will be introduced to exercises and games, fostering seamless and poetic group work - a stepping stone for our democratic society.

Financial Planning: How to Become Financially Literate

This seminar raises the participants' awareness for economic challenges and fosters their competences to make sound financial decisions. Based on a self-assessment, students learn about various financial goals and basic principles of budgeting and financial planning. There will also be explained the foundations of financing and investing with a special emphasis on various investment opportunities. Furthermore, the students learn how to invest money with a strong focus on retirement saving. The approach is based on diversification among several asset classes as well as on lump sum investments or cost averaging. The students will eventually be able to set up a target asset allocation and create portfolios using securities existing on the capital market.

Creative Writing: How to Be Bold with Your Words

In an expanding culture of AI technology, we can understandably be suspicious about anything supposedly 'created'. This seminar explores the benefits of creative writing as a means to experiment, to develop confidence, to investigate verbal expression, and to find fluidity with words. We will learn how to worry less about the 'right way' of saying something. We will share our language skills and learn how to write more boldly. Most importantly we will realise the value of learning through play, understand the value of creativity in all fields of work and how creative language is essential in expressing ideas.

The Art of Being Spontaneous – Improvisation in Music and Beyond

We all do improvisation - physically, musically, theatrically, and mentally in order to learn what we need. Being part of a group, being in the room, leading, following, deconstructing and creating - all together, all on the spot, is what makes it improvised. As professional musicians from MUK we will share our expertise: deep listening, meaningful reaction and creative collaboration. You don't have musical skills or play an instrument? That's great, because we want to have as many specialists from various fields to jump into the deep end and allow synergies of all kinds to blossom. Please bring an open mind to leave your comfort zone. Will we create an improvisation show together? Let's find out!

Mindfulness: A Critical Appreciation in Times of Climate Crisis

Industrialisation has produced specific styles of perception, which can be characterised as an 'economy of attention': a purposeful orientation of human perception towards predetermined areas, while fading out the periphery of what is perceived or the context of action. Mindfulness, on the other hand, opens up perception to the periphery and to internal and external contexts. And this is exactly what is needed to deal with the climate crisis: the ability to include the consequences of action as comprehensively as possible. The seminar aims to exemplify these connections through practical exercises as well as theoretical input.

Making Progress in Polarised Times

Social cohesion even in highly developed democracies seems endangered by polarised political and social forces and tendencies. How can political decision-makers, but also members of civil society and politically active citizens contribute to bridging the growing social and ideological divide and strengthening social cohesion; at a time when the pressure on societies is increasing dramatically due to poly-crises and a growing inequality?

This seminar gives in practical examples and exercises an overview of the drivers of polarisation and teaches methods and skills to navigate polarised situations effectively. The seminar is informed by research from leading polarisation experts and designed with best-practice adult learning.

Keep It in the Ground: Diffusing Carbon Bombs

A skill we thought we might never need is currently in high demand: that of diffusing - not literal but so-called -“carbon bombs”. If all fossil fuel extraction infrastructure projects ("carbon bombs") that are currently in the pipeline are realised, the 1.5 celsius climate goal is under extreme threat. Carbon emissions must fall by half by 2030 to preserve the chance of a liveable future, the IPCC states, and therefore decisive and effective action is needed. This seminar will enable you to take your first steps towards designing effective climate action campaigns aimed at promoting the non-extraction of further fossil fuels.

Strategic Foresight: How to Use Futures for Decision Making

In a complex world, the first reaction is to try to control what is coming. However, the future is unknowable. Prediction and planning, even though useful, are limiting ways to work with the future in the present, because they aim at 'knowing' a 'future'. The future exists in the plural, and the right verb for futures is not 'know', it's 'use'. Strategic foresight is the key to using them. In this course we will introduce the concepts and build an initial capability to use futures for decision making.

Sound Matters. Are You Listening?

Sound occurs when something, anything, vibrates. For there to be sound, there must be vibration. The consequences, however, go beyond sound. They also have political and societal impact when experienced by humans and non-humans. This seminar will explore how sound shapes environments and investigate why listening is as important as looking when trying to understand how places are constructed. We will also investigate the ways soundscapes are changing due to human impacts and why focusing on the sonic world can reveal the uneven power relations which structure society, exploring the soundscapes of Alpbach. We will create our own sound project using sounds recorded during the week to examine the relationship between people, place and the sonic environment.

The Many-Faceted Dimension of Energy Transitions

The transformation of energy systems towards climate-compatible solutions promises innovation, technological progress and socio-economic development. Decarbonisation is a major step towards regaining strategic energy sovereignty and safeguarding national and regional energy security. This seminar will set out to investigate different aspects of the energy transition and how this might differ depending on the developmental stage and the specific context. We will shed light on how the energy transition is deeply intertwined with societal transformations that require careful and deliberate behavioural shifts to manage demand, shift patterns of consumption and production, and evolve new models of sustainable lifestyles. We will also look at how energy systems can be a major driver for more inclusive and equitable societies and better human and planetary health.

European Interests in a Changing World Order: China, the USA, and Like-Minded States

"Right now, there are changes - the likes of which we haven't seen for 100 years - and we are the ones driving these changes together," were the words of Chinese President Xi to Russia’s President Putin at their Moscow Meeting in March 2023, with a New World Order outlined in their 2022 joint declaration on "International Relations in a New Era", shortly before Russia invaded Ukraine. The tensions have heated up between those supporting the existing order - under the leadership of the United States - and those who want to revise it, crystallising over Taiwan and elsewhere. The struggle for influence, shaping narratives, and competing on cutting edge, civil-military deployable technology is well underway. In which direction are European countries and the European Union heading in these turbulent times?

Global Trade, Sanctions and Weaponisation of Trade

This seminar will explore the societal and political aspects of free trade, including voting behaviour, populism, democratisation, and societal polarisation. We will examine how these factors can impact the success of free trade agreements and the wider implications for society and politics. Additionally, we will delve into the societal aspects of sanctions, exploring their effects on, e.g., democratization and human rights. Finally, we will discuss trade as a weapon, considering its implications in current events such as the Russian war in the Ukraine and the case of China. Through discussion and analysis of current events and academic literature, this seminar will provide attendees with a comprehensive understanding of the complexities surrounding international trade and trade sanctions.

Envisioning a Net-Zero Europe: Imagining a Bold, Independent and Sustainable Europe

This seminar is built on the belief that we can't just think about the status quo and how to change faulty systems. We also need positive visions of justice, democracy and ecology that guide us through times of crisis. What if we started a new? Starting from a (literally) blank slate, we'll work in interdisciplinary groups across three large sectors: living spaces; mobility and identity; developing a vision for a net-zero continent. From rethinking public space to new rail infrastructure and a more co-operative European identity, we'll produce a map of Europe that looks very different from today, but might serve as a guiding light for an EU in 2050.

Feminist Foreign Policy in Practice

Almost a decade after Sweden declared that it would follow a Feminist Foreign Policy, several other countries have adopted similar approaches. Most recently, Germany introduced Feminist Foreign Policy guidelines that seek to make gender equality and women’s rights central objectives of Germany’s external relations. But how is Feminist Foreign Policy practiced by different countries and what are some of the contradictions between feminist commitments and traditional foreign policy goals? What might Feminist Foreign Policies look like in concrete cases like the Russian war against Ukraine?

Europe’s Struggle for Technological Sovereignty and Prosperity

Technological sovereignty has been a central theme in political debate, not least in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic and the Russian war of aggression. Europe has lagged behind major technology powerhouses such as the US and China in creating and sustaining ground-breaking technology companies. In this seminar, we will discuss the main challenges and barriers to innovation European tech companies are facing today. The seminar will also explore the implications of new technologies for the future of European economy, work, inequality, and aspects of ethics of technology. We will discuss on how we can achieve technological sovereignty in Europe, if it is possible, or even desirable as well as how technological sovereignty relates to broader geopolitical and strategic issues around relations with China and the United States, managing complex global supply chains, and conflict dynamics as currently demonstrated in the Ukraine war.

Responsible AI, Ethics, Law and Society

The deployment of Artificial Intelligence systems in multiple domains of society raises fundamental challenges and concerns, such as accountability, liability, fairness, transparency, privacy and how to protect human rights in the future. The dynamic nature of AI systems requires a new set of skills informed by ethics, law, and policy to be applied throughout the life cycle of such systems: design, development and deployment. Tackling these challenges calls for an interdisciplinary approach: deconstructing these issues by discipline and reconstructing with an integrated mindset, principles and practices between data science, ethics, law, and others, and ongoing collaboration among them.

This course aims to do so by bringing students in direct contact with possible effects of AI, and consequently tasking them to reflect and find responses to the AI-induced challenges. The current legal and philosophical debate on AI will serve as benchmark to generate solutions. The sessions will include lectures, discussions, and group work. No specific background is required, but students are asked to contribute from their specific disciplinary strengths. Students are also asked to accept an intensive series of in-class sessions, and not be afraid of encountering outdoor interactions.

In this seminar, radicalisation and extremism in the digital space is examined, as well as how real-life events, the environment and everyday social challenges contribute to radicalisation processes, and what extremism looks like in an online setting.

Digital spaces affect our daily lives. We share, we watch, we consume, we talk, we believe and we engage. The internet is great, until it isn’t, until a violent crime is committed and media reports and politicians jump to the conclusion that an attacker was part of controversial or extremist communities online. But is it always that easy? We will look at extremist communities online to identify how digital spaces can contribute to radicalisation processes. We will also discuss response strategies on the policy, educational and civil society levels.

How to Revive Multilateralism?

Multilateralism is under attack and out of fashion, yet it is more needed than ever because of present and emerging challenges that require states to work together. This seminar will look at some of the reasons why multilateralism has been failing, why it is still needed, and discuss how it can be revived. It is argued that cooperation in an interconnected world full of “wicked” and complex threats and challenges is realpolitik and in the self-interest of states. Participants will brainstorm on how to make the current international system more fit for purpose. Furthermore, participants will have an opportunity to identify areas where interests between even non-liked states converge, and what can be done both diplomatically and operationally to deal with common transnational problems. In addition to lectures and interactive discussions, participants will have an opportunity to prepare and present positions in preparation for the UN Future Summit as part of a simulation.

On Distinctions

We constantly make distinctions. In this seminar, we will discuss the concepts of distinction and difference in general and their role in social, political and scientific discourse in particular.

Are distinctions given or are they created? When, how and why are they introduced in discourse? How are we socialised into distinctions in our education in different societies? We will discuss the distinction between liberal and illiberal democracy, between fact and fiction, science and pseudoscience, truth and error, moral and immoral, sex and gender. These distinctions become relevant when conflicts arise.

Just Climate Transition or the Energy Race Towards Net Zero Emissions

Addressing climate change requires rapid and just systemic transformations at an unprecedented scale. The seminar will provide an overview of the scientific and political discussions pertaining to climate justice. Through interactive sessions students will learn about the main approaches to generate climate scenarios and critically reflect upon existing narratives that underpin them. We will illustrate both climate risks and climate opportunities and assess the impact of major climate policies, such as the US Inflation Reduction Act. Emphasis will be given also to the potential of the demand-side mitigation and the role of cities and digitalisation in accelerating clean technology diffusion, increasing innovation, and democratising the access to basic services.

Water Quality and Ecosystem Functioning for Human Survival

The overall objective of this seminar is to work on future perspectives on the putative 'free' and 'guaranteed' access to water and proper ecosystem functioning. It is examined, how ecosystems will support the provision of sufficient and clean water around the world and how water availability, use and security will change until 2050 and will cope with a predicted world population of 10 billion people. We aim to identify possible strategies for dealing with water use and ecosystem functioning today and in the future - worldwide. We will look at the challenges through a climatological and ecological lens and will also investigate how water influences migratory movements.

Playfully Serious, Hands-On: Housing of the Future

In this interactive seminar we will experiment and discuss concepts regarding the housing of the future. In a world that is dominated by crises, climate change and scarcity of resources it is necessary to develop strategies for a built environment that is sustainable and circular, that enables social inclusion and empowers people. By visiting best practice projects and by experiencing and reflecting together on the built environment in Alpbach, we will develop skills and awareness on how to use available resources, such as existing buildings and materials. Playful hands-on approaches, different means of architectural expression and 1:1 spatial experiments will help us in our enquiry to opening new perspectives on the housing of the future.

Working Together (Spells Success)

In actor training, students are first introduced to the concept of ensemble. Artistic endeavours in the field of acting are very much a group activity. This is why the more proficient students become at collaborating as a group, the better they perform individually. In this peer-to-peer seminar with students from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, you will be introduced to exercises and games, fostering seamless and poetic group work - a stepping stone for our democratic society.

Financial Planning: How to Become Financially Literate

This seminar raises the participants' awareness for economic challenges and fosters their competences to make sound financial decisions. Based on a self-assessment, students learn about various financial goals and basic principles of budgeting and financial planning. There will also be explained the foundations of financing and investing with a special emphasis on various investment opportunities. Furthermore, the students learn how to invest money with a strong focus on retirement saving. The approach is based on diversification among several asset classes as well as on lump sum investments or cost averaging. The students will eventually be able to set up a target asset allocation and create portfolios using securities existing on the capital market.

The Art of Being Spontaneous – Improvisation in Music and Beyond

We all do improvisation - physically, musically, theatrically, and mentally in order to learn what we need. Being part of a group, being in the room, leading, following, deconstructing and creating - all together, all on the spot, is what makes it improvised. As professional musicians from MUK we will share our expertise: deep listening, meaningful reaction and creative collaboration. You don't have musical skills or play an instrument? That's great, because we want to have as many specialists from various fields to jump into the deep end and allow synergies of all kinds to blossom. Please bring an open mind to leave your comfort zone. Will we create an improvisation show together? Let's find out!

Creative Writing: How to Be Bold with Your Words

In an expanding culture of AI technology, we can understandably be suspicious about anything supposedly 'created'. This seminar explores the benefits of creative writing as a means to experiment, to develop confidence, to investigate verbal expression, and to find fluidity with words. We will learn how to worry less about the 'right way' of saying something. We will share our language skills and learn how to write more boldly. Most importantly we will realise the value of learning through play, understand the value of creativity in all fields of work and how creative language is essential in expressing ideas.

Mindfulness: A Critical Appreciation in Times of Climate Crisis

Industrialisation has produced specific styles of perception, which can be characterised as an 'economy of attention': a purposeful orientation of human perception towards predetermined areas, while fading out the periphery of what is perceived or the context of action. Mindfulness, on the other hand, opens up perception to the periphery and to internal and external contexts. And this is exactly what is needed to deal with the climate crisis: the ability to include the consequences of action as comprehensively as possible. The seminar aims to exemplify these connections through practical exercises as well as theoretical input.

Making Progress in Polarised Times

Social cohesion even in highly developed democracies seems endangered by polarised political and social forces and tendencies. How can political decision-makers, but also members of civil society and politically active citizens contribute to bridging the growing social and ideological divide and strengthening social cohesion; at a time when the pressure on societies is increasing dramatically due to poly-crises and a growing inequality?

This seminar gives in practical examples and exercises an overview of the drivers of polarisation and teaches methods and skills to navigate polarised situations effectively. The seminar is informed by research from leading polarisation experts and designed with best-practice adult learning.

Keep It in the Ground: Diffusing Carbon Bombs

A skill we thought we might never need is currently in high demand: that of diffusing - not literal but so-called -"carbon bombs". If all fossil fuel extraction infrastructure projects ("carbon bombs") that are currently in the pipeline are realised, the 1.5 celsius climate goal is under extreme threat. Carbon emissions must fall by half by 2030 to preserve the chance of a liveable future, the IPCC states, and therefore decisive and effective action is needed. This seminar will enable you to take your first steps towards designing effective climate action campaigns aimed at promoting the non-extraction of further fossil fuels.

Strategic Foresight: How to Use Futures for Decision Making

In a complex world, the first reaction is to try to control what is coming. However, the future is unknowable. Prediction and planning, even though useful, are limiting ways to work with the future in the present, because they aim at 'knowing' a 'future'. The future exists in the plural, and the right verb for futures is not 'know', it's 'use'. Strategic foresight is the key to using them. In this course we will introduce the concepts and build an initial capability to use futures for decision making.

Sound Matters. Are You Listening?

Sound occurs when something, anything, vibrates. For there to be sound, there must be vibration. The consequences, however, go beyond sound. They also have political and societal impact when experienced by humans and non-humans. This seminar will explore how sound shapes environments and investigate why listening is as important as looking when trying to understand how places are constructed. We will also investigate the ways soundscapes are changing due to human impacts and why focusing on the sonic world can reveal the uneven power relations which structure society, exploring the soundscapes of Alpbach. We will create our own sound project using sounds recorded during the week to examine the relationship between people, place and the sonic environment.

Feeling Safe (Is Key)

A sense of safety and security is essential in actor training. Work can be very demanding and challenging as students need to be present and emotionally available, at times using their own experiences for creation. As such, it is important that they do not feel exposed. This peer-to-peer seminar with students from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art will share the training aspects that allow them to be vulnerable by creating a safe environment.

IDEAS Camp

Join us for the Alpbach IDEAS programme, a newly designed initiative aimed at bridging the gap between discourse and practice, providing a space for designing experiments and continuous learning. Aspiring changemakers, innovators, and problem solvers are invited to participate in a series of three dynamic workshops called IDEAS Camps. Attendance at all three workshops is mandatory for individuals interested in joining the Alpbach IDEAS programme in 2023/2024.

Workshop 1 with Marina Bartoletti: explores compassionate systems and eco-centered problem-solving.

Workshop 2 led by Gabriele Rizzo: offers insights from Harvard and Stanford frameworks to shape visions effectively.

Workshop 3: puts frameworks into practice, fostering collaboration and team formation.

Active participation is highly encouraged throughout all workshops, as they are designed to be interactive and engaging. The desired outcome is for each team to gain clarity on the experiment or idea they wish to pursue in the upcoming year. It's not about having perfect ideas, but about learning and experimenting, embracing the spirit of innovation and growth. Participation in the Alpbach IDEAS programme is open to everyone, including scholarship holders and participants of the LAB days. Don't miss this incredible opportunity to engage in transformative learning, shape your ideas, and contribute to positive change in the world. Join us at the IDEAS Camps and let's embark on an inspiring journey of exploration, experimentation, and collaboration.

Sufficiency and Democracy: New Processes for Inclusive Societal Transformation

Supported by: Stiftung Mercator Schweiz

Amidst the prevalence of greenwashing and lukewarm sustainability strategies, sufficiency concepts could serve as a powerful means to reignite the ambition required for a profound societal transformation towards sustainability. However, public debates on sufficiency often remain limited in scope, primarily focusing on reducing excessive individual consumption of resources and energy. Yet, sufficiency is fundamentally an integral component for an inclusive societal transformation. Embracing the aim of a good life for all, how can we effectively translate the principles of sufficiency into a new social understanding within democratic societies? On this we will reflect during a walk, discussing the development of new understandings and their implications for participation processes, governance structures, and existing institutions.

Session Objective: Creating a community of action? Connect with like-minded individuals, build interest groups and promote long-term action by planning next steps and follow-ups with other participants.

Securing Female Voices in Politics

Supported by: Landecker Foundation

Being active in politics can be life-threatening for women. The tremendous amount of violence, hate and harassment female politicians face both on- and offline is dangerous and has a deterring effect. Anti-feminism, anti-gender, anti-diversity and sexism are part of the standard toolbox of extremist movements. Securing female voices in politics is important if we want to ensure representative decision-making and inclusive societies.

Active participation is highly encouraged throughout all workshops, as they are designed to be interactive and engaging. The desired outcome is for each team to gain clarity on the experiment or idea they wish to pursue in the upcoming year. It's not about having perfect ideas, but about learning and experimenting, embracing the spirit of innovation and growth. Participation in the Alpbach IDEAS programme is open to everyone, including scholarship holders and participants of the LAB days. Don't miss this incredible opportunity to engage in transformative learning, shape your ideas, and contribute to positive change in the world. Join us at the IDEAS Camps and let’s embark on an inspiring journey of exploration, experimentation, and collaboration.

Climate Activism: Driving Climate Policy

Over the past years, youth-led climate movements have been particularly powerful and effective in putting the climate crisis on the political agenda. How can the current climate protests shape policy, as activists increasingly demand structural, systemic change? How can politicians and administrators better incorporate the interests of young and future generations into policy?

Session objective: Creating a community of action ? Connect with like-minded individuals, build interest groups and promote long-term action by planning next steps and follow-ups with other participants.

INFO: Circular hiking trail Alpbacher Heimatweg. Bring hiking shoes and water. In case of heavy rain, the session is going to take place in the classroom EG1 of the Volksschule Alpbach.

Geopolitics vs Norms: EU Enlargement as a Clash of Urgencies

Supported by: European Council on Foreign Relations and ERSTE Foundation

The candidate status for Ukraine and Moldova, and the open European perspective for Georgia, have sparked questions around the duration and viability of the process and the need for a visionary yet realistic approach. How to approach enlargement geopolitically and strategically while at the same time secure the democracy consolidation and respect for rule of law in the candidate countries?

High Polluters in Europe: Can they Finance their Transition?

High-emitting companies, such as those in the energy sector, are major contributors to climate change and will therefore play a critical role in achieving the transition to net-zero. While low-carbon technology investments in the energy sector have increased steadily in recent years, we are far from where we need to be. How can emitters, investors, investment banks and policy makers move the dial on financing the transition? How can capital markets help accelerate this process?

Session objective: Imagining new possibilities? Get inspired and foster new ideas by imagining bold solutions to complex challenges and imagine disruptively new ways of thinking.

Why Sports can never be Non-Political: 33 Sports Events that Changed the World

Hosted by: Club Alpbach Salzburg

Is it reasonable to claim that sports should remain separate from politics? When entering a football stadium, a tennis court, or visiting the Olympic Games, no one simply disregards their political and moral beliefs. This reading discusses the importance of not only cheering for LeBron on the basketball court? but also actively listening to his insights on systematic racism; or why it is problematic when autocratic leaders use sporting events to distract from their human rights abuses.

Why Women Should Run the World

Women have historically been underrepresented in leadership roles and have faced various forms of discrimination and barriers to accessing high-ranking positions. Studies have shown that women bring collaborative leadership styles and a focus on social issues that can lead to more equitable and inclusive policies. How do they overcome the obstacles they face? How can women set their own agenda and shape their respective fields?

From Climate Anxiety to Climate Action

Hosted by: AIT supported by Environment Agency Austria and Federal Ministry for Climate Action, Environment, Energy, Mobility, Innovation and Technology

The psychological effects of the climate crisis are becoming increasingly apparent in society: Feelings of being overwhelmed, guilt, sadness or even despair are summarised as Climate Anxiety. In order to be able to act again, we need to regain control of the situation. How can stories be told to create hope, scope for action and motivation to act? In short: How can Climate Anxiety become climate action?

Economic Growth and Green Transition: Compatible Objectives?

Hosted by: Club Alpbach Trentino & Club Alpbach Senza Confini

The uncontrolled economic growth of the past fifty years is seen as a major cause of the current climate crisis. Urgent action is needed to address climate risks and rethink economic development within the global framework. Alessio Terzi, author of Growth for Good: Reshaping Capitalism to save Humanity from Human Catastrophe, argues that an alternative approach is possible. By drawing on various disciplines, Terzi proposes a revaluation of capitalism to tackle the challenges of climate change. He will present a program to involve capitalism in the fight against climate catastrophe, emphasizing the importance of policies and citizen involvement.

Grow – Green – Digital: Which Role for Capital Markets?

A sustainable and resilient economy is the foundation of Europe’s future prosperity. To achieve this, Europe needs to provide sufficiently diverse sources of finance for the ecological and digital transition, and for financing the structural shifts in our economies, including those caused by recent geopolitical events. What is the role of larger and more liquid capital markets? How can they help secure Europe’s future prosperity? How can these sources of finance be increased and efficiently used?

Decarbonisation Technologies for a Climate-Neutral Future: How to get it done

Supported by: RHI Magnesita

Both Europe (by 2050) and Austria (by 2040) have the goal of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and becoming climate neutral. To achieve this, the major industrial emitters must do their homework. We want to find answers to the following questions: How can European industry, with its investments in research and technologies, achieve the Net Zero goal? How do the rising prices for CO2 certificates affect the ability to invest in research and development? How can the mammoth task of decarbonization succeed?

Talk with Catherine Ashton

So much of modern-day diplomacy still takes place behind closed doors, away from cameras and prying eyes. So, what does this vital role really look like in today’s world? and what does it take to do it well? Catherine Ashton, the EU’s first High Representative for Foreign Affairs and Security from 2009 to 2014, will share insights and anecdotes from her new book “And Then What?: Inside Stories From Twenty-First-Century Diplomacy.”

Democracy vs. Autocracy – How can Democracy Win?

There is a global struggle between democracy and autocracy as two competing systems of governance, intensified by the War in Ukraine. Europe itself faces both internal and external threats to democracy, through democratic backsliding and malign actors. How can European democracies be reinforced? How can we better counteract autocratic leaders and methods? And how can Europe and its allies take on a democratic leadership role?

Session objective: Challenging assumptions? Have your beliefs and assumptions questioned, broaden your perspective and critically reflect on old and new questions and challenges.

Will Tech Bail Us Out?

The global community may only have six years left to set actions that will limit global warming to 1.5 degrees. New technologies for carbon dioxide removal are expected to take about ten more years to become operational at a significant scale. This is a race against time. When will future tech breakthroughs be able to support an effective transformation towards net-zero? How do we align our actions and thinking today in view of these future tools?

Technology and Geostrategy: Bold Europe

As the current crises prove, innovations are more important than ever to address our major challenges, from decarbonisation to digitalisation and demographic change. At the same time, technology has become a geostrategic instrument: Those who lead the way in future technologies leave their mark on the world. Europe is wedged between the major power blocs USA and China, who are forcefully pushing development. The central question is how Europe can leverage its strengths and consolidate its position in the world.

Come on, Who Asked You?

Hosted by: Presse

Companies want ? not without reason - entrepreneurial people: employees who ?dig in?, come up with ideas, and give their heart and soul. But companies do not want this to be confused with a democratic constitution. In the spirit of the ?resilience of democracy? we will discuss the question of having a say, being heard and taking personal responsibility. We will also ask ourselves the question whether psychological security is more than a buzzword and what (future) skilling has to do with democracy.

The Lack of Economic Opportunity Is Eroding Democracy – What has to change?

The lack of economic opportunity erodes democracy by creating social and economic inequality, marginalisation and disillusionment of citizens. This can lead to a loss of trust in institutions and political processes, as well as to increased social and political tensions. How can we change course and build equitable and democratic societies, considering the variety of interests involved?

Session objective: Imagining new possibilities ? Get inspired and foster new ideas by imagining bold solutions to complex challenges and imagine disruptively new ways of thinking.

Europe’s Economic Lessons Learned from Russia's War against Ukraine

Russia’s war against Ukraine has severely disrupted historic economic and financial ties with Europe. Europe’s large exposure to Russia has led to huge adjustment costs and the need to reshape its economies for a longer-term disengagement from Russia. How can Europe assume a position of strength while dealing with these adjustments? How, in turn, can Europe foster interlinkages with Ukraine for mutual benefit and integrate its large economy into its markets?

More Green, Less Grey – Realising Innovative Urban Neighbourhoods to Prevent Overheated Cities

Supported by: SIGNA

Green facades are seen as a tool to strengthen the resilience of cities against the backdrop of climate change. However, the devil is in the details. Fire protection, the right choice of planting, and pressure of use of public space are examples of many factors that must be ensured to achieve optimum effect. Another highly effective form of not only protecting urban space from overheating, but also pushing biodiversity, is green roofs. During the Hike, national and international showcase projects will be discussed with high-level experts.

The Future of Food and Agriculture – and the Politics Behind

Supported by: Federal Ministry for Agriculture, Forestry, Regions and Water Management

Farmers only contribute to approx. 1.3% of the European gross domestic product, but their efforts to feeding the world are priceless. With a global population hitting ten billion by 2050, food supply must more than double. However, we witness an unbalanced shift of priorities in politics. The Minister of Agriculture, Norbert Totschnig, and others discuss issues around consumer demand, food security and policy.

Are we Bold enough - Green Finance for Various Challenges

Supported by: Federal Ministry of Finance

The future of the global, European and Austrian economy must be shaped in line with the Paris climate targets. This requires substantial investment needs. Thus, it is clear that the public sector cannot do this alone, it requires support from the private sector, too. Against this background, we need to create a framework to enable private capital for green investments. The question now is: what is required from politics and what requires the transition from us all?

Tackling the Cost-of-living Crisis | Is the Middle-Class losing ground?

Supported by: Erste Group

The World Economic Forum cites the Cost-of-living crisis as the biggest near-term risk through 2025, followed by natural disasters, extreme weather events and geo economic confrontations.

How well prepared is Europe, is Austria, to counter such risk? What measures do we consider necessary to cushion the impending loss of prosperity? What options do we have when one of society's basic promises for a good life is suddenly called into question: the promise of an affordable home for oneself and one’s family.

The Future of Transatlantic Relations after 2024

In recent months, the two sides of the Atlantic have drawn closer together in the face of the Russian war of aggression against Ukraine. However, first cracks are already visible in the transatlantic front, for example when it comes to industry subsidies or relations with China. Next year could bring another challenge to the relationship as both the EU and the United States will be heading to the polls. What would a Republican victory mean for EU-US relations and how should the EU prepare for all possible outcomes?

Pitch: The Clash of World Orders

In February 2022, the leaders of Russia and China announced their intention to build a new world order more in line with their interests and less dominated by the West. Is this the beginning of a new Cold War or are we moving towards a multipolar system with multiple centres of power? Alternatively, one could also argue that Russia?s setbacks in Ukraine and China?s failed COVID-19 policy mean that the United States will remain the sole superpower for the foreseeable future. Three speakers will present their views on the current world order and the future one in 2040.

Session objective: Challenging assumptions ? Have your beliefs and assumptions questioned, broaden your perspective and critically reflect on old and new questions and challenges.

Time for a „Zeitenwende“ in Austria?

The war in Ukraine has caused many European countries to fundamentally rethink their security and defence policies. Finland and Sweden have decided to abandon their decades-long policy of non-alignment and to join NATO. Germany has announced a ?Zeitenwende?, a historic turning point, for German defence policy and a special fund of 100 billion euros for the German Armed Forces. Austria has also decided to increase defence spending and to develop a new security strategy. What should the cornerstones of this new strategy look like and how should Austria adjust its security policy in light of the changed geopolitical framework? To kick-off the debate, the Austrian Institute for European and Security Policy (AIES) will present the findings of their new study on Austrian security policy.

Waste Management and Climate Change: What happens with YOUR waste?

Supported by: City of Vienna

Your Waste - and what happens to it - has an impact on climate change. Solutions are: waste prevention, high quality material recycling and smart thermal treatment (for example in Waste to Energy Plants) of the remaining non-recyclable mixed waste. No waste should go directly to a landfill.

Austria demonstrates long-term best practise examples in the waste management sector for years, however worldwide, high amounts of waste directly go to landfills untreated. This causes about 10 % of the global greenhouse gas emissions. Therefore, it is crucial to collaborate - nationwide and across boundaries - to develop an optimised and climate-friendly waste management.

Into the Silence

A union of Peace: Spiritual impulses from different religious and philosophical traditions invite participants to reflect and contemplate. Inspirational impulse givers are going to tell their stories, invite you on a journey of thought and initiate moments of real stillness.

Closing: Austria in Europe Days

At this closing fishbowl, everybody is invited to share memories and stories and to reflect on two weeks of encounters, debates, common experiences and Alpbach moments. We also want to think ahead and talk about the topics that will shape the Bold Europe and should therefore be subject of EFA24.
